Razzie "Tampa Red" Smith taught his students the value of education
Sandra Mathers

Razzie "Tampa Red" Smith spent 17 years teaching football to scores of high school students, mostly in Orange County. But that wasn't all he taught them. Smith of Orlando, a coach and shop teacher who showed his students that education was their ticket to a better life, died Sunday. He was 69. "He was an excellent high school coach, but youth and education were his passion," said his daughter, Cheryl Smith of Orlando. "He helped so many kids stay in school and go to college. He talked to them about how important it was to get an education."

Smith, who taught at Phyllis Wheatley High School in Apopka and Jones High School in Orlando, left the coaching ranks at Jones in 1977 to continue working for the School Board as a social worker, his daughter said. He retired in 1995.

After growing up in Orlando and graduating from Jones, Smith joined the Army before enrolling in South Carolina State University. He graduated with a degree in industrial arts education. He began his teaching career in Arcadia before moving to Orlando in 1963. "My father had a wonderful spirit," his daughter said. "He did for us (kids) what he did for others." Cheryl said she and her four brothers are all college graduates, thanks to their dad. She has a business degree from her father's alma mater and coordinates minority and women-in-business enterprises for a brother's construction company. The company is working on the expansion of the Orange County Convention Center.

A 37-year resident of Washington Shores, Smith was a member of the Washington Shores Homeowners Association, and the J.P. Piner Amvets Post #30. He was also a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity.

Tyler spent his formative years living on and around college and university campuses in Florida, Georgia and Kansas. Therefore, he embraced diversity and accepted change with vigor.

During his matriculation in high school, Tyler was a member of the Latin Honor Society and the Latin Club. He was also an active member of the Warner Robins Kappa Leadership Development League for over five years, 2010-2015. In 2015, Tyler graduated from Houston County High School after spending four years as a JROTC cadet and aspiring Air Force Officer. TELAFARE, NANNIE MAE (February 12, 1902 - July 14, 1994) - Mrs. Nannie Mae Telafare, the third child born to the union of Mance and Sarah Ann Oxford, died on July 14, 1994. "Aunt Nan" died peacefully in her home surrounded by members of her immediate family. She was funeralized at the West Hunter Street Baptist Church in Atlanta, Georgia on July, 18. Her funeral was attended by many relatives from the "Oxford clan." The body was interred at Lincoln Memorial Cemetery. The following statement was made at the funeral by Monroe Fordham on behalf of the "Oxford clan."

"A Family Tribute To Aunt Nan."

Aunt Nan, as she was affectionately known throughout our family, was our oldest living relative. She was one of the two remaining children of Mance and Sarah Ann Oxford at the time of her death. Born in 1902, Nannie Mae Telafare was one of our few remaining direct links to the era of the turn of the 19th century. She was the product of a simpler place and time--a time before our moral and spiritual values became tainted by the influences of the post-industrial culture. In spite of the encroaching erosion of our cultural values, she was able to maintain a level of immunity and personal tranquility that has eluded most of us. Through her strong and quiet faith in God, she discovered a way to insulate herself from many of the worst effects of the modern world.

To the outside observer, Aunt Nan sometimes appeared to be what we would call "old fashioned." She was soft spoken, yet strong willed. She did not exhibit her religious values and beliefs in a holier-than-thou manner, yet she was almost puritanical in her demeanor. She was straight-laced and no-nonsense, yet she exuded a kind and loving spirit, and a special gentleness to all who knew her. Somewhere along her life's journey, Aunt Nan discovered the true meaning of God's purpose for her life. That discovery provided the underpinning for the quiet confidence and serenity that she exhibited in her daily life. That purpose certainly included a loving concern for her family; and that love and concern was returned in kind. We all loved her, and we recognized and appreciated her special qualities. Young parents in our family wanted their children photographed with Aunt Nan. At our family reunions, relatives wanted her autograph. She was special, and her presence among us made our family seem special.

Members of her biological family, her church family, and her friends are assembled here this morning not to mourn the passing of Nannie Mae Telafare, but to celebrate and commemorate the meaning of her life. If we are to truly prosper beyond the narrow material and cultural meaning of the term; and if we are to prevail in what the Scriptures describe as the "war of principalities," and eventually find inner peace and tranquility, we too must follow the path of spiritual discovery that Aunt Nan traveled. We must embrace her legacy and pass it on to our children. All of our lives are richer because we had the opportunity to know her.

A Special Tribute from Your Grandson

R.I.P Grandma. I love you so much. All I can do is think about the good times. You were my everything. When my mother said no, you always said yes. But I know God got you now and I know He will take good care of you. So Grandma just look down on me and smile because I won't let you down. You said take care of my family and I will. So you just take it easy up there. Don't worry too hard, but I know you won't. I love you Grandma. You will be missed. Love, Marcus xoxo
